

Professional organizer marks five-year anniversary

Rochester Hills-based Organize Your World, Inc. is celebrating its fifth anniversary.

Owned by Donna Lindley, the professional organizing firm serves both residential and business clients. In addition to on-site organizing, Lindley's team offers seminars designed to help people become more productive by educating them on the fundamentals of organizing in the areas of space, time, electronic files and paper.

"When I first started Organize Your World, we primarily serviced residential clients," she says.

"We now provide organizing services to both business and residential clients with organizers specializing in each of these different areas. We have also put a lot of emphasis on professional development."

Lindley is a member of the National Association of Professional Organizers (NAPO) and attends its national conference every year, which provides a wealth of specialized education.

She is a graduate of Hemphill Productivity Institute and has earned the prestigious designation of Certified Professional Organizer from the Board of Certification for Professional Organizers. She is a member of the inaugural class of Certified Professional Organizers. Out of more than 3,500 NAPO members, Lindley was one of approximately 200 professional organizers nationwide and two in Michigan to earn this designation.

"I anticipate our business will continue to grow," she says. "In this challenging economy we all need to be able to work more productively with the resources we have – both time and materials. It's not about working harder, but smarter – making the best use of your time and talents."

Organizing one's time and space at home gives a person control and reduces stress, according to Lindley. It's also a key to a better business environment.

"At work, being organized is a critical skill for success," she says. "Our seminars are a great solution for employers because they are guaranteed to increase your employees' productivity the very next day. They can accomplish more once they have learned how to effectively and efficiently handle e-mail, paper, electronic files and time management."
